ABSTRACT

This document notes that more than 700,000 public school students drop out of school annually and recognizes that many national, state, and local programs exist to encourage young people to stay in school. It describes the National Dropout Prevention Center as a resource base and a clearinghouse for those involved in reducing the high dropout rate, and presents this directory of people involved in dropout prevention programs around the country as part of the Center's commitment to facilitating coordination and cooperation among programs. The directory itself is divided into three sections (national, regional, and state) and includes representatives from educational organizations, regional laboratories and groups, and state departments of education. In addition, some contacts from local and city-wide organizations are included. Information for the directory was obtained from questionnaires and telephone calls, and from organizations who contacted the National Dropout Prevention Center. More than 350 names and addresses are included.(NB)

Each year more than 700,000 public school students drop out of school. One out of every four will not graduate. This alarming rate of school dropouts poses a major threat to our economy and our society. While there are many national, state, and local programs to encourage young people to stay in school, to date there has been little coordination of these efforts. The National Dropout Prevention Center at Clemson University was established in October of 1986 with the help of Mrs. Esther B. Ferguson, founder and co-chairman of the National Dropout Prevention Fund in New York City. The Center serves as a resource base and clearinghouse for those involved in reducing the high dropout rate.

As part of the Center's commitment to facilitating coordination and cooperation among those concerned about this critical issue, we are pleased to provide you with this directory of people involved in dropout prevention programs around the country.

The directory is divided into three sections—national, regional, and state—and includes representatives from educational organizations, regional laboratories and groups, and state departments of education. In addition, some contacts from local and city-wide organizations have been included. Information for this directory was obtained from questionnaires and phone calls, as well as from organizations who contacted the National Dropout Prevention Center.

This directory is by no means inclusive, and the Center regrets any errors or omissions. However, a directory such as this one is an on-going project, and we will make every attempt to keep it accurate and up-to-date. You can help us by letting us know about any changes in the information listed, or if your address is not correct on the mailing label.

We gratefully acknowledge the support of Mrs. Esther Ferguson, the National Dropout Prevention Fund , and Clemson University President Max Lennon. In addition, we would like to thank the General Foods Corporation, whose gift to the Center enabled us to publish and distribute this directory. We hope you find this information useful in your networking with other people involved in dropout prevention. The Center welcomes your suggestions and comments.

John V. "Dick" Hamby
Acting Director
National Dropout Prevention Center
Clemson University

The National Dropout Prevention Center at Clemson University supports and assists individuals and organizations involved in dropout prevention by consolidating, evaluating, and disseminating knowledge, as well as coordinating research efforts. For more information, write or call the National Dropout Prevention Center, Clemson University, 393 College Avenue, Clemson, South Carolina 29634-0725, Telephone 803-656-2599, or 800-443-6392 outside South Carolina.
